

Product Description

- clearly describe what you want
- context, format, audience, style, and other constraints
- Give the AI the information it needs to deliver what you're actually looking for, not just assuming what you want

Process Description

- "How" can be more important than "what"
- Providing training specific to your problem
- Specific data, key tasks, preferred order, and so on

Performance Description

- AI Tools are interactive systems that can behave differently in different contexts.
- You need to explain how you want the AI to behave to get the best results

Key takeaways

You need to do more than just write prompts

By nurturing your capacity for product, process, and performance description, you can transform AI tools from generic assistants into finely tuned thinking partners
